“The 2030 agenda for Sustainable Development adopted by all United Nations member states in 2015 provides a shared blueprint for peace and prosperity for people and planet, now and in the future. At the heart are the 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), which are an urgent call for action by all countries – developed and developing-in a global partnership. They recognize that ending poverty and other derivations must go hand in hand with strategies that help improve health and education, reduce inequality, and spur economic growth – all while tackling climate change and working to preserve our oceans and forests.”¹
